G&M ACQUIRES MANUSCRIPT MAP MADE FOR GEORGE WASHINGTON

The Geography and Map Division has acquired a [Plat of a survey of 2,314 acres of land, being the first large bottom on the east side of the Ohio River], scale 100 poles to an inch, surveyed by William Crawford for George Washington, 1771, manuscript map, 34.6 by 57.3 centimeters. The following annotation appears below the survey plat in the handwriting of George Washington, "Patented in the name of George Washington." In addition, some measurements of "River Courses & Distances" are shown in Washington's script. The patent in Tract No. 1 of three tracts of Washington's land on the Ohio River in West Virginia shown on a map drawn by George Washington in 1787. The George Washington Atlas, edited by Lawrence Martin in 1932, shows this tract on Plate No. 24.

William Crawford (1732-1782) was a contemporary of George Washington. His long association with Washington started when the latter came to the frontier in 1749 to survey the vast holdings of Lord Fairfax. They were together on the expeditions of Braddock (1755) and Forbes (1758). Crawford also served as a Major commanding a group of riflemen under Washington during the American Revolutionary War. In 1765 Crawford built a cabin at Stewart's Crossing, about 35 miles southeast of Pittsburgh, where he established himself as an Indian trader, surveyor, and farmer. In 1770 Washington visited Crawford (October 13-November 25) and the two men traveled extensively through the Ohio Valley. They shared an interest in land speculation and selected and surveyed several tracts for Washington. The above grant was from the Governor and Council of Virginia dated December 15, 1769, for Washington's military services to the Colony of Virginia. George Washington eventually had over 40,000 acres patented in the Ohio River area.

Mr. Harrison has written four books of poetry–Plain Song (1965), Locations (1968), Outlyer and Ghazals (1971), and Letters to Yesenin (1972)–and two novels, Wolf (1971) and A Good Day to Die (1973). A new novel, Farmer, will soon be published by Viking Press. He is now living on a small farm in Michigan with his wife and two daughters.

Mark Strand was born in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, Canada, in 1934 and grew up in the United States. He attended Antioch College, from which he obtained a B.A. degree. After graduating from Antioch, he went to Yale University, where he studied painting and received an M.F.A. degree. In 1960 he went to Italy on a Fulbright scholarship and the following year he attended The Writers' Workshop at the University of Iowa. He has taught at the University of Washington, Columbia University, Yale University, Princeton University, Brandeis University, and other schools. FINAL BIDS ON MADISON BUILDING INVITED

An invitation for bids on the final construction phase of the Library of Congress James Madison Memorial Building was issued by the Architect of the Capitol, George M. White, on January 30. This phase of construction will include the furnishing of all labor, equipment, and materials, and performing the work required for the interior and related work for the building.

Project manuals and drawings were available for issue to qualified prospective bidders on or about the date of the invitation. Sealed bids will be received by the Architect of the Capitol until the public opening at 3 p.m. on April 16.

PHOTODUPLICATION SERVICE LABS RENOVATED

The program to completely renovate the Photoduplication Service laboratories which began approximately two years ago was recently completed. The project was accomplished in four phases, Phase I being the renovation of the microfilm camera room in the cellar of the Annex Building. This phase served as a test before renovation of the two larger camera rooms was undertaken. After the new cellar camera room had been in use for four months, it was agreed that the design would be satisfactory for the remaining camera rooms and the staff of the Architect of the Capitol proceed with the three remaining phases of the renovation beginning in April 1973.

Phase II of the renovation program included the lower camera room of the Microphotographic Laboratory (SB-1035) which was completed in early 1974. Phase III, the upper camera room (SB-1039), was completed in early June 1974. Fifteen microfilm camera stations were installed in the lower room and 21 were installed in the upper room. The renovation included an entirely new air conditioning system, suspended ceilings, special lighting, and a new configuration for the cameras which allows for a semi-enclosed area for each camera. The wall areas surrounding each camera were covered with acoustical material, painted in a light green with the trim finished in the natural wood. In addition, new stands permitting more flexible operator work stance were acquired for each camera. Each operator now has a multi-drawer stand with lock for storing special materials needed for microfilming operations as well as for personal effects.

The fourth and final phase, completed in the fall of 1974, gave the main laboratory, including the photographic and electrostatic print areas (SB-1007), a new air conditioning system that provides a dust-free environment. The Electrostatic Print Section Copyflo printers have been enclosed in a conditioned room to provide adequate air conditioning at negative pressure in order to assure a maximum control of the printing powders during operations. A new ventilating system was also installed to provide an adequate flow of air and heat from the laboratory to insure optimum working conditions for the staff. The main laboratory and photographic areas also received acoustical ceilings and appropriate surfaces painted in light colors.

As part of the renovation, the photographic dark rooms were refurbished with built-in cabinets and tables colorfully finished to offer a pleasing effect for the staff during periods when regular lighting is feasible. The air handling system installed in the main laboratory is a linear diffusion type which provides equal air distribution throughout the entire area as well as plus pressure to assure a dust free environment. The chemical mixing area has been equipped with a separate rapid exhaust system that quickly expells fumes from all sinks during the mixing operation.

The Photoduplication Service Laboratory, at the completion of the renovation, now serves as an excellent example of a photocopying service in a library environment and is a credit to the staff of the Architect of the Capitol and to the Administrative Department staff.

NEWS IN THE LIBRARY WORLD

SLA Winter Meeting Report

The Winter Meeting of the Special Libraries Association was held in St. Petersburg, Fla., January 15-18 with the Board of Directors, the Chapter Cabinet, the Division Cabinet, and Special Committee Chairmen in attendance. The Chapter Cabinet is composed of Chapter Presidents and Presidents-elect and the Division Cabinet of Division Chairmen and Chairmen-elect, replacing the now defunct Advisory Council.

At the Board of Directors Open Session, which was chaired by SLA President Edythe Moore, SLA Executive Director Frank E. McKenna announced that the state of the association was moderately good, with a small operating deficit but an increase in membership to 8,826. He also announced an increase in allotments to $3.25 per member to chapters and $2.25 to divisions.

After considerable discussion pro and con, an increase in dues from $30 to $40 for members and associate members and from $100 to $200 for sustaining members was approved, effective January 1, 1976. This, of course, is subject to ratification by the members of the annual business meeting during the June 1975 conference in Chicago.

SLA President-elect Miriam Tees reported on the proceedings of the January 14-15 SLA/NCLIS (National Commission on Libraries and Information Science) meeting on the NCLIS second draft report. Rosemary Demarest of the Committee on Committees reported on the Awards Committee, the Committee on Networking, and the Student Relations Officer, defining the number of members for the committees and the overlapping terms.

Roger M. Martin and Shirley Echelman are, respectively, Chairman and Chairman-elect for the Division Cabinet; they provide liaison and assistance for the participation of the divisions in the annual conference. H. Robert Malinowsky and Jean Deuss perform the same functions for the Chapter Cabinet.

Pauline Vaillancourt of the Educational Committee recommended endorsement of the Continuing Library Education Network plan. An amendment proposed by Gilles Frappier, to substitute an education committee for appointed representatives, was adopted. Another topic in the educational area that generated much discussion concerned honorariums for special educational seminar leaders or instructors. A committee is to be established to develop guidelines for the honararíums, bearing in mind that the association is a non-profit organization.

Considerable controversy developed in a discussion of subject oriented groups and their relationship to the divisional or chapter structure. This led to the establishment of a committee of three from each cabinet to study the problem and report to the Joint Cabinet in June.

Shirley Harper, originally the Chairman for the Chicago Conference, announced that she would not be in Chicago and introduced David King who assumes the chairmanship. Annabelle Quick, SLA Conference Coordinator, reviewed the program planning required and requested an early start for the 1976 meeting, to be held in Denver, with headquarters in the Brown Palace.

The group was entertained by the Florida Chapter at the dinner on Friday night—an evening of nostalgia with souvenir postcards of Florida dating back to the 1920's and entertainment by a quartet of female singers. [Catherine Bahn and Renata Shaw]
